Cameras that can see through your clothes at 80 paces; Council tax rising to cover increased CCTV needs; suggestions that Internet Service Providers should monitor customer usage in the comfort of their own homes; plus ID cards, fingerprint and eyeball recognition on the horizon.

In the 21st century is there anywhere to hide? And if not, should there be? Pocket Issue Big Brother: Who is watching you? twitches the curtain and takes a hard look at our increasingly hi-tech, zero privacy society.

Joseph O'Neill is an author and broadcaster whose work has featured in all the major family history magazines. He writes a regular feature for the BBC's 'Who Do You Think You Are?' and is author of Crime City, his account of Manchester's Victorian underworld.
